"SEVEN DEVILS" - FLORENCE AND THE MACHINE

"When the Sun Goes Down" is the imagining of everything that could be happening while everyone is asleep-- the scary, the dark, the strange...

Thank you to all my wonderful dancers who worked so hard every rehearsal, and a huge thank you to Emily Giedzinski, who had no hesitation in jumping in to help teach the choreography when I broke my foot mid-semester-- the piece never would have made it to the stage without you.

For this piece, we wanted to do something different that the audience probably had not seen before. The piece starts out as a battle between the tap and hip hop dancers, each group running the other off the stage. But after a one on one battle, the hip hop and tap dancers come to realize that even though they dance differently, they can learn from each other and respect each other, as should all forms of dance in the dance community. We just really want to thanks our dancers for working with us through this experiment of ours. We could not have done this without them! Best of luck, guys!
